Delegates Debate Nonstudent Seats

Thiem Stays, Reno May Go

by Larry Olmstead
Hatchet Staff Writer

After a bitter, grueling five-hour session, delegates to the constitutional convention voted overwhelmingly 18-3-1 Thursday to defeat a motion that would have removed Robert Thiem as their parliamentarian.

The delegates also voted to refer to the credentials committee the question of whether Rick Reno, who is not a registered student this semester, should remain as a delegate.

The motions to remove Thiem and Reno, made by delegate Jerry Tinianow, came in the wake of articles appearing in Thursday's Hatchet which stated that neither Thiem nor Reno had registered as students for this fall semester. A story on Thiem quoted four student leaders as claiming he had too much influence on student organizations, and other students have claimed they were misled into believing that Thiem was actually a registered student.

All of the student leaders quoted in the story—Program Board head Alan Cohn, Student Productions co-chairman and Joint Committee of Faculty and Students member Jeff Milstein, student representative to the Board of Trustees Committee on Student Affairs Mark Mitchell, and convention vice-chairman T. James Ranney—were present at the meeting.

In introducing his motion to oust Thiem, Tinianow point to both the Hatchet stories and an editorial appearing in the same paper calling for the convention to remove Thiem as examples of negative student opinion which, he said, might threaten the chances for approval of the final document.

"Out of the 15,000 members of the student body," said Tinianow, "there must be someone we can find with as much parliamentary expertise as Thiem who will be more acceptable to everyone."

Other delegates voiced concern over retaining Thiem. Rob Shepard, who had told the Hatchet before the meeting he intended to vote against Thiem and later changed his mind, asked Thiem why he had originally told him he was enrolled at GW. Thiem replied, "I did not intend to lead anyone on, and the question regarding my status as a student is in question. I consider myself a student, but I am not registered this semester."

The move to oust Thiem was supported by speeches from Mitchell and Milstein. Mitchell said he wanted to try to give the convention an idea of "how the campus feels," adding, "while Thiem has worked and contributed to the constitution, we have to ask if what he's doing is for the good of the campus."

Milstein told the convention he felt the constitution might have difficulty getting ratified if Thiem stayed on as parliamentarian. "I want to tell you that the feeling among members [of the Joint Committee] is that the committee doesn't trust Thiem...Many people think that the convention is a Thiem convention."

Milstein pointed out that he had spoken privately to a minority of the 14-member committee and emphasized that his views did not necessarily represent those of the entire committee.

Anderson Attacks Congress' Politics

by James Justus
Hatchet Staff Writer

Congressman John B. Anderson (R-Ill.) attacked the Democratic majority in Congress for its use of "strategic politics" before a meeting jointly sponsored by the Program Board and the Ripon Society Wednesday night.

Anderson told the audience of 25 people that he had expected more from the new Congress' Democratic and Republican freshmen and blamed their performance on what he called the "adversary relationship" present in Congress.

"Strategy has become more important than arriving at solutions," Anderson said. He accused the Democrats of using strategic politics, or politicking to further their own political ends, in the current fight over energy legislation. He charged that the Democrats are arguing for a reduction of one and a half cents on oil prices so the party will look good in the upcoming election year instead of concentrating on legislation that would make the United States independent of oil from the Middle East.

Anderson, head of the House Republican Conference, focused on the use of strategic politics within the government during his speech. He said such tactics are necessitated by the growing complexity of the decision-making process in government and the intricacy of society, but there is a danger that the "mechanics will become more important than finding a solution and the ends will become the means."

Anderson said government is now at a watershed period. The government and its agencies are increasingly distrusted by the public at a time when government is needed to lead the country, he said.

A "strategy for change" is needed to solve the problems of crime and unemployment as well as straighten out the welfare issue, but as long as strategic politics will be practiced, government will continue to be distrusted, he continued.

Anderson said that as a Republican he was concerned with the possibility of President Ford slipping into the use of strategic policy. He argued that the media was interpreting the recent "Sunday Night Massacre" in which Ford reshuffled his cabinet as a move to appease the conservative elements of the Republican Party and weaken Ford's prime contender

Students Boogie At Dimples

These four GW students went to the Program Board's party at Dimples Discotheque to shake, rattle and roll with the music. Featured during the evening were a dance contest and a backgammon tournament. The winners of the dance contest were Ben Reed and Kori Levine. For topping the other contestants, Ben and Kori will compete next week for a trip to Puerto Rico. About 40 GW students attended the Thursday gathering.

Students Work With Patients

by Alan Lawrence
Hatchet Staff Writer

Intense concentration could be read on the man's bronze, weathered face. Every muscle in his body seemed to be involved in his task. His eyes never left the board in front of him, his ears were trained solely upon the speaker's voice. The man generated a sense of excitement, in contrast to the calm voice which called out the numbers.

Another number, a pause, and then slowly, cautiously, a smile alighted on the man's face. The smile seemed paradoxical, it appeared to express the innocence of a child while at the same time exhibiting the venerable confidence of a lifetime of experience. Yet nobody could doubt the sincerity behind that happy visage. It would seem that the goal was well worth working for.

The man is a patient at St. Elizabeth's hospital, a Federal mental institution in S.E. Washington. The voice belonged to Stan Seelig, a GW student who does volunteer work at the hospital, through his participation in the Student Volunteer Action Council (SVAC) St. Elizabeth project. The incident took place at a bingo game in one of the geriatric wards.

About 25 SVAC volunteers go to the hospital Thursdays and Fridays. SVAC supplies the manpower, the local Red Cross provides the transportation, and the hospital provides the opportunities. The volunteer situation benefits everyone; students gain experience in working with the patients and what they call an inward sense of satisfaction, the hospital staff gains aid in the work, and patients benefit from the companionship and compassion of the volunteers.

Seelig goes to his ward regularly each week. Sometimes he plays guitar, or piano, or leads a sing-a-long. Last Friday he was playing bingo, giving out small prizes of cigarettes, rings or decks of cards to the winning patients. Eventually, the game can be worked so the winner gets to call numbers for the next game, getting the patients more involved.

Anne Ailes, a psychology major, also works in a geriatric ward at the hospital. She works under a "foster care" program designed to eventually get patients out of the hospital

Students Complain

Police Peeping In Windows?

by Andrew H. Karp
Hatchet Staff Writer

Complaints that Executive Protective Service (EPS) officers have been observing Mitchell Hall residents in their rooms from a parking garage behind the dorm have resulted in an order from EPS Deputy Chief Martin J. Riordin that the officers "stay away from the garage."

Mitchell Hall resident Richard Decof had complained to the Mitchell front desk on Nov. 3 that two officers were standing on the fifth level of the Colonial Parking Garage on 20th and E Sts. and looking into windows of the dorm. "One person was standing in full view and holding something," said Decof, and one officer "appeared to be holding a can of coke or beer."

According to Director of Campus Security Harry Geiglein, two officers acting on Decof's complaint went into the garage and found an EPS car which left the area shortly thereafter.

An employee of the garage said he had seen the same EPS car, U.S. Government license plate #4192, in the garage "almost every night since school started." He said that he has at times picked up at least three beer cans from the area the car was parked in after its departure. According to the employee the garage has already been cleaned for the night before the times the officers arrive.

Early last week, EPS Chief Earl Drescher, responding to the allegations, said "This is the first I'm aware of it." Drescher said since the garage is located near the Uruguay Embassy, the officers might be using the garage to observe that building. From the fifth level, where the officers had been seen, it is possible to look at a portion of the embassy only by leaning slightly over the railing of the garage on the Mitchell side. The entire embassy can be observed from the sixth or roof level.

The EPS is the uniformed segment of the Secret Service and is responsible for the protection of the President, Vice President, and all foreign embassies and missions in the D.C. metropolitan area.

Secret Service Spokesman, Ron Crider, said "It's not a rule of procedure that we go up to the roof of the Colonial Garage, but a lot of our officers may do so to get a bird's eye view of the embassy."

He said he would "find it very hard to believe knowing the caliber of men we employ that our men would be consuming intoxicating beverages while on duty." According to Crider, all EPS officers are physically examined as they check in and out of duty shifts.

Riordin said last week, "I've instructed our officers to stay away from the garage." He said, however that a supervisor's car might enter the garage from time to time to make sure no other EPS personnel were there. "We have a reputation to the public to maintain," Riordin said.

In a related situation, three calls have been made to Campus Police this semester by Mitchell Hall residents or staff complaining that people were observing them from the General Services Administration (GSA) building on 19th St.

According to Geiglein, one complaint to Police said that one person was looking at the dorm from a GSA window through a pair of binoculars. John Vawter, a GSA spokesman, said "we have had several complaints and are investigating them."

Geiglein said that an agreement has been made with the Federal Protective Service, which guards the GSA building, that all complaints of GSA "peeping Toms" made to security will be turned over to the EPS for investigation. In the meantime, said Geiglein, "we have advised students to keep their shades down."

for the Republican nomination, former California governor Ronald Reagan.

Anderson said he believes President Ford's television address explaining his reason behind the shift was in "sharp contrast" with the open candor expected from him by the country. In response to a question from the audience, Anderson said that he saw "little net gain in the changes," and that if Ford's shifts were an "effort to practice strategic politics, it misfired."

Anderson was asked if he thought limiting the Presidency to one term of office would prevent dabbling in strategic politics by the President. He responded that he thought one term was too short to master the complexities of the office and to mastermind and implement programs.

Anderson also said he was dissatisfied with the recent United Nations vote which equated Zionism with racism. He stated that he would not support a move in Congress to withdraw from the United Nations although he would "not be adverse to putting on pressure" in the form of cutting off United States economic contributions to the U.N.

as long as the pressure was within reason.

Anderson predicted that the replacement for William O. Douglas on the Supreme Court would probably be a conservative who shared President Ford's political philosophy and might possibly be a woman, although he thought such an appointment in the wake of the "Sunday Morning Massacre" would be interpreted by critics as a politically motivated decision.

He went on to say he felt that if President Ford does not do well in the New Hampshire and Florida primaries, other Republicans might announce their candidacy.

and into a foster care home. Ailes discusses current events, what she calls "reality things," with the patients. Many have been in the hospital for ten years or more and know very little of the outside world of today. Ailes views her work as "incentive for thinking; you really see people differently."

Psychology major Freda Steinberger works in a wheelchair geriatrics ward, doing recreation-oriented tasks. She plays and sings for the patients, or helps them with art projects, or plays checkers, or simply talks with them. Of her work she said, "It's a good shot of reality."

Tonia Starr, another psych major, works with adolescents. She has the special advantage of working closely with a social worker, thus often having the opportunity of approaching patients on a one-to-one basis. She has been doing volunteer work for over a year now.

She mentioned how her work has made her see life in a little different perspective. "When I get depressed and I'm down with my problems, and I'm convinced that I've got it bad, I can just think about the hospital and it makes all the difference."

Richard Blackman, one of four coordinators of volunteer services at the hospital, explained the program. GW and other local universities have students who give time at the hospital. He pointed out, "Every public hospital is understaffed," and said the volunteers were really doing a wonderful job.

Blackman explained that they were helping either to prepare the patients for the outside world or simply attempting to make life easier for them at the hospital. One way or the other, Blackman stressed the interaction with the patients, "getting them involved." He said "everybody can do something," and "there's never been a volunteer here that hasn't made somebody's life a little better."

Senate Votes To Postpone Decision

by John Conlow
Hatchet Staff Writer

The GW Faculty Senate met in executive session Friday to formally consider charges of discrimination lodged against the history department by Associate Professor of History Linda G. DePauw. There is no indication of what decision was made in the case.

DePauw first filed formal charges against the department in a letter to the Faculty Senate on June 5, 1974. In the letter, DePauw said she had not been recommended for promotion because of "some factor or factors unrelated to job performance."

Sources close to the controversy have indicated that DePauw's grievances stem from her feeling that she has been unfairly overlooked for a promotion because of her sex and age.

The letter, formalizing charges against the department, came after several unsuccessful efforts were made by the Executive Committee of the Faculty Senate to informally resolve the conflict.

DePauw's charges stem from a decision made in the fall of 1973 by a committee of 10 full professors in the history department. The group reviewed DePauw's request for a promotion, but its final decision did not come out until the spring of the following year. It was at this time that DePauw filed charges alleging discrimination.

DePauw's application has come before the history department three times in the past three years. According to one professor involved with her request for a promotion,

Linda G. DePauw
alleges discrimination

DePauw has not been treated any differently than anyone else.

Following the recommendations of the Special Committee, the Professional Ethics and Academic Freedom Committee of the Faculty Senate instituted formal proceedings where lawyers represented both DePauw and the history department. The hearings began Sept. 22 and lasted for seven days. Over 60 exhibits were introduced and 700 pages of transcripts compiled.

The transcripts of the hearings and the recommendations of the Ethics Committee, submitted October 7 of this year, are closely guarded secrets within the University.

On Oct. 31, the Faculty Senate convened a special session to consider the hearing results. After four hours of deliberations, however, the Senate did not agree on the case and a wrap-up session was scheduled for last Friday.

A number of options are open to the Faculty Senate. It can amend or revise the recommendations of the Ethics Committee, refer the matter to GW President Lloyd H. Elliott and the Board of Trustees for a final decision, or recommend that no action be taken.

Entrance Guaranteed

Law Entrance Break Given

by Kate Cranston
Hatchet Staff Writer

In an effort to decrease some of the pressures of being accepted to law school, the GW Admissions Office and the National Law Center have established a program of guaranteed admission.

According to Laurel Milcoff, head of the program, the Admissions Office selects 12 incoming freshmen interested in law who are in the top tenth of their class and have scored 1300 or better on their college boards. Once they have been admitted to GW, they must maintain a grade point average of 3.35 and score 650 on their first set of LSAT's.

No interviewing is conducted because applications and test scores have been found to be the best predictors for selection, Milcoff said. "We have found that the interview situation can become too subjective and also many students do not interview well," she continued.

Students in the program can only major in subjects compatible with a law degree. Most of the students currently participating in the program are majoring in liberal arts, including international affairs and economics.

"While we're on the road, we tell the high school counselors that the program is available to these select students. Many times people ask us if GW offers any guaranteed admission programs or the students find out from word of mouth," she said. "But there is really no big push or publicity campaign involved."

The National Law Center established the standards for the guaranteed admission students and the Admissions Office selects them as they apply to GW. Additional counseling is available to those involved in the program at the Law School. But according to Chris

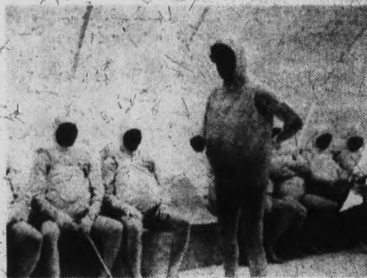

Varveres, one of the first participants in the program, "we've had to take the initiative to get together with the people at the Law School."

"We met with the Law School one time last year to talk about what the program should be but since then there has been very little counseling going on," Varveres said.

"I thought it was incredible when I first heard about it," said Rober Zuccaro, a freshman at GW. "I've found it works as an incentive to keep my grades up. It gives you a goal to shoot for but one of the first things that crossed my mind when I was applying was that I hoped it would do more good than harm."

Guaranteed Admission has been in operation for three years and none of the applicants have graduated yet. According to Law School Associate Dean W. Wallace Kirkpatrick, "it is impossible to say if the program is successful until we get the first group of students."

Do You Need a Rare Book? Special Collections Can Help

by Mark Potts
Asst. News Editor

"We function like a small library within a library," said David Zeidberg, curator of the University Library's Special Collections Department.

Although Zeidberg holds the title of curator, he is quick to emphasize that the Special Collections Department doesn't consider itself a museum. "We consider ourselves another part of a good academic library," explains Zeidberg.

Special Collections occupies about a quarter of the space on the library's second floor, but only a small fraction is generally visible. There is a Special Collections study room, but most of the remaining space is taken up with collections of books, publications and other paraphernalia.

The collection of University publications includes a full set of University yearbooks, a collection of bound Hatchets missing a scant few copies and a large number of dissertations.

The shelves of books and manuscripts contain many rare first editions, as well as two volumes of incunabula—Latin for "from the cradle"—books printed before 1500, in the earliest days of the printing press. Both books are of a theological nature, one dating back to 1498 and the other to 1478.

Zeidberg said the collection's points of emphasis are in economics, travel and exploration, the history of printing and Washingtoniana—publications and books pertaining to Washington, "the city, not the man." This part of the collection includes Washington city directories dating back to 1822.

Special Collections has three main functions: to collect and collate all University publications, to house the University's collection of rare books and manuscripts and to serve as a research center.

Currently, however, most of the work being done in Special Collections is the cataloguing of the books and manuscripts. Only about 25 per cent of the books have yet been catalogued; the collection numbers 80,000 volumes and increases steadily as more donations come in.

The reason for the lag in cataloguing is twofold: Cataloguing of each piece of material requires thorough research into the history of its publication and ownership; and only recently has such cataloguing been done.

Special Collections was formed in 1969 primarily to oversee the collection of University publications. Shortly afterward, however, Special Collections was given the additional responsibility of caring for the University's rare book collection, which at that time was in storage.

Since then, work has been proceeding slowly, and Zeidberg was appointed last Aug. 1 as the collection's first curator. He said the cataloguing of the collection has been moving along much more rapidly in the past three months, largely because of modern technology. The department is now using the library's OCLC computer system, and Zeidberg says this move "has quadrupled our production," although he does not expect cataloguing to be completed for another four or five years.

One Special Collection current project is a reconstitution of the original library of the Columbian College. Using an inventory list made when the library opened in 1825, the Special Collections staff is attempting to piece the collection back together. Most of the books are already in University possession, and the remainder will either be purchased out of Special Collection's limited acquisition funds, or obtained from outside donors.

Overall, the collection gets "five or six donations a month," according to Zeidberg, ranging from one book to several. One recent donation was 42 volumes of works on economic thought.

Special Collections gets about 25 patrons a day, most of them desiring University publications, according to Zeidberg. The department gets another 100 requests a week from outside scholars for use of University publications.

Blood Drive

GW will host a Red Cross blood drive Wednesday, Nov. 19 between 10 and 3:30. The drive will be held in the Center ballroom, and a goal of 125 donors has been set. Persons wishing to donate blood should call the Student Activities Office (676-6555) for an appointment.

If you wish to make a donation, but cannot be certain of the time you'll be free, the Red Cross Center you'll be free, the Red Cross Center at 2025 E St. (less than a five minute walk from campus) is well-equipped to take walk-in donors.

RATPAC May Be Out Of Programming Money

Since its inception last semester, the committee on Rathskeller Programming, Atmosphere and Cuisine (RATPAC) has been marred by dissension and conflict within its membership as well as lack of funds with which to program, according to some members.

Both William Ferster and Lou Baccach, RATPAC's first co-chairmen have resigned, as have several of the original members.

RATPAC was given $450 for operational costs which could be used to fix up the interior of the Rathskeller at the beginning of the year, in addition to $600 for programming this semester. According to chairman Percy Aguila, all of the programming money is exhausted.

Aguila said that as far as he knows, "we are not going to get any more money from the Student Activities Office." Aguila explained that any money needed in the future will have to come from the Program Board. "If we want money, we will have to make a request to the Program Board," he said.

According to Gary Landsman, the Program Board representative on RATPAC, "there is some money, but not enough to program."

According to Landsman, the $600 given to RATPAC by the Governing Board for programming "was a drop in a bucket."

As far as programming groups at the Rathskeller, Ferster said there is not "a good future unless there is a considerable amount of money. We could only pay them what was collected at the gate."

"No good bands will play for that," he continued, "and therefore there will not be any good entertainment until RATPAC is supported by either the Governing Board, Student Activities, or the Program Board."

According to Ferster, there was "a lack of communication between members" and most "had no idea how to program."

Survey Of Drug Use Taken

by Jane McHugh
Hatchet Staff Writer

Drug abuse is not confined to pills. "Alcohol is the most used and abused drug," said Dr. Donald Davis, director of Family Research at GW Medical School, who is conducting a survey to determine the relationship between drug use and family stability.

"We're interested in understanding more about what happens within families affected by drug use," Davis said. "We want to determine what special treatment should be available and what percentage of patients will need such services," he said.

When the study is completed next spring the responses of 7,000 to 8,000 GW Hospital patients will be analyzed. Although the survey began last spring, it is still too early to draw any inferences, said Davis.

"There is very little data on middle-class medical center populations and their need for drug and alcohol services," Davis said.

Survey questions are classified according to how often the individual uses drugs and the social consequences of his drug use, he said. Davis said the relationship between social classes and level of education are other factors involved in the research.

"In general among adults, the college educated are more likely than the less educated to have used each of the [drug] substances," said sociology Prof. Ira Cisin. Last year Cisin conducted a descriptive study of non-prescription drug use in the U.S. He said observations of drug studies depend on how the terms "drug users" and "drug substances" are defined by the researcher.

Cisin's study was not based on socio-economic status, but he observed that the gap is closing between men and women. "Historically, drug users have been predominantly male. However, indications are that women are catching up," he said. Cisin said drug use in households for his study will be analyzed in the future.

Victor Cohn, professor of pharmacology, believes alcohol is most dangerous to families "in terms of intensity of the effectiveness of the drug." Cohn said treatment for families with drug problems had included group counseling techniques.

"Sometimes families are dealt with as an entity. Sometimes parents are dealt with separately or children are dealt with separately," Cohn said. Alerting families to the potential harmfulness of drugs depends on whether they are willing to listen, he added.

ISS Leader Beaten, Hurt

ISS President, Mohammed A. Farooqi was attacked in an elevator by two University of Maryland students after leaving Saturday night's Israeli coffeehouse.

According to GW Security's reports of the incident, Farooqi and a friend were followed into the elevator and he said he was punched in the mouth. When the elevator stopped at the ground floor, Farooqi fell to the floor and his friend screamed as the two students ran from the Center. Campus Security and students chased the two students to 21st and H Sts., where they were arrested. Farooqi was taken to GW Hospital for examination and released later that night.

Farooqi refused to press charges against the two students, who were taken to the Campus Security office and released after being told not to return to campus again.

People who make fraudulent phone calls often get another call free.

Using someone else's credit card or phone number, or using electronic devices, may seem like a harmless prank.

But what it really is, is stealing. And just like any other kind of theft, it could lead to an arrest. A stiff fine. Or even a jail sentence and a criminal record. And no matter what else happened, you'd still have to pay for all the calls you made. So please don't make fraudulent phone calls.

It just isn't worth the price.

'Kiss Me Kate:' What Would Shakespeare Think?

by Ron Ostroff

If Bill Shakespeare had been in Lisner Auditorium last weekend to view the University Theater's production of Cole Porter's Kiss Me Kate, he would have liked what he saw.

Sure, no one likes to see their work destroyed. But when the destruction is wrought by Cole Porter, the new version becomes just as good as, though very different from, the original.

Kiss Me Kate takes the audience to a Broadway try-out in Baltimore, entitled The Shrew. Liberally based on Shakespeare's The Taming of the Shrew, it is the play within the play Kiss Me Kate. Through this device, the audience sees not only The Shrew, but also what goes on backstage before the production and during intermission.

In the world of The Shrew, the performers are involved in a number of interesting relationships. The leading players, Fred Graham/Petruchio (Jack Zager) and Lilli Vanessi/Katharine (Shelby Tetiva), have been divorced for about a year. She is planning to marry some high-brow, exceedingly boring Washington politico. The relationship between the ex-husband and ex-wife is civil, and sometimes even romantic. But when Lilli receives flowers from Fred with a card addressed to Lois, things become violent.

The characters of Bill Calhoun/Lucentio (Brian Seth Hurst) and Lois Lane/Bianca (Leslie Ann Campbell) are in love. Bill is in love with Lois, and Lois is in love "in her own way" with Bill and almost everyone else.

Bill has a bad habit—gambling.

John Pruessner (left) and John Degen sing and sway through "Brush Up Your Shakespeare" in the GW production of Kiss Me Kate which played over the weekend. (photo by Mikel Yeager)

He quickly picks up another—forgery. At the beginning of the show, he signs Fred's name to a $10,000 IOU. Because of this, two gangsters follow Fred through the entire show, even when he is on stage.

The production (Kiss Me Kate, that is) started with the cast limbering up on stage. It's a nice effect, but the players exercised and fooled around too long, causing the viewers to start wondering when the show was going to start. Once on its feet, the production held together nicely. All the performers were at least adequate. No one glaringly disrupted this entertaining evening.

John Degan and John Pruessner, however, went above and beyond the call of duty (with the help of two great parts) to steal the show as the two gangsters singing, dancing and laughing through "Brush Up Your Shakespeare." The duo added a touch of something less than class to The Shrew's large-egoed company of performers.

The leading man (Jack Zager) and lady (Shelby Tetiva) also highlighted the production. Zager had a number of solos and performed them all well. His only problem was his volume—sometimes he could not be heard over the music.

On stage for most of the production, Zager looked very secure and sure of himself despite the fact that this was his first leading role in a GW production. When Lilli misbehaved on stage and Zager gave her a public spanking, he looked like he really enjoyed it.

Tetiva was delightful as Kate and Lilli. When she threw plastic flowers at Petruchio, you could practically feel her anger. You almost hoped she wouldn't miss. Her rendition of Kate's swan song—"I Hate Men"—was a powerful statement about the bad points, good points ("he may have hair upon his chest, but, sister, so has Lassie!") and necessity of men.

The best singer of the production was Leslie Ann Campbell. Warning Bill to behave; singing about possible suitors, love, and her special brand of love, Campbell constantly reminded listeners of the advantages of a musical. The sound of her voice was something that you remembered after the show was over.

Another very bright spot was the costume design of Paul Parady. His best effort was Zager's wedding suit. It looked like the results of a mischievous child's afternoon with scissors in his mother's clothes closet and his haphazard attempts to put the garments back together upon hearing his mother's arrival. The thing was beautiful. It came out looking like Joseph's multi-color coat put through a shredder. And Zager wore it like the Emperor wore his new clothes.

The only slightly disturbing elements of Kiss Me Kate were the dancers' less than perfect coordination and the occasionally renegade trumpets in the orchestra of GW students.

This was another good excuse to discover your University Theater, GW. But from the looks of Thursday's less than half-filled house, you blew it again!

The GW University Theater Production of Kiss Me Kate closed Saturday night.

D.C. Filmmakers Have Festival

by Dennis Glick

The Washington Area Filmmakers League is currently exhibiting a program of eight short films representing the work of Washington area filmmakers. The films range in length from two and a half to 28 minutes and mostly concern personal experiences in the lives of the filmmakers.

Sojourn by Michael Parkerson impressionistically contrasts the harsh realities of everyday ghetto life with a young man's romantic dream of escape by using different film stocks and sound tracks for each section of the film. The film was shot using borrowed equipment and was financed by Parkerson's earnings as a factory worker.

Robin, by Earl Higgins, was made as a student film at the University of Pennsylvania. It probes sensitively into the life of Robin, a young child with Muscular Dystrophy. Shot in black and white, the film uses a sound over narration by Robin to poignantly document her inner feelings about herself, her father, and the happiness they share.

I Remember The Gym by Charles Mullin, is an upbeat trip into surreal cinema. Taking one of the least likely aesthetic objects imaginable, Mullin transforms the gymnasium into a swirling, topsy-turvy flow of color and shape.

Clear by Virginia Witt is a relatively lengthy (18 minutes) satirical narrative which disturbingly spoofs a budding affair between two people who meet at a Scientology lecture.

Of the other four films, The Festival of American Folklife should be mentioned for its outrageous professionalism. Financed by the Smithsonian and shot on seven miles of 16mm color stock by two complete crews of nine members each, it slickly portrays a number of the more filmable events of the most interesting exhibition.

The appearance of this show (which also marks the surfacing of the Film League) signals the birth of a new consciousness regarding film production and distribution in the D.C. community. The League believes that the short, inexpensively-made film will attract a body of informed, enthusiastic viewers who, by their participation at screenings and other WAFL events, will support the on-going film work of League members.

The group is also preparing a directory of available film personnel in the area which will list skills and previous experiences of people who desire work in any aspect of film creation and production. The League is further concerning itself with perhaps the single most significant obstacle to a flourishing filmmaking community, that of how to get decent equipment without paying expensive rental fees. A cooperative equipment ownership is being considered as a possible solution.

For more information on WAFL, call Meg Wood at 265-5320. The films will be shown for the last time tonight at 10 p.m. at the Biograph.

Students...What Students?

The constitutional convention's overwhelming vote in support of Robert Thiem, the non-student parliamentarian (see story, p. 1) is another indication of where many of the delegates' sympathies lie...and it's apparently not with the students.

Delegate Leroy Riley, who according to the Hatchet report gave one of the most persuasive arguments of the evening, put his feelings about the general student body right on the table. "You say the students are looking at us with a critical eye," Riley said, speaking to delegate Mark Mitchell. "I say you're full of shit. I say they're not even looking at us." Perhaps Mr. Riley's statement has some merit, but at the same time it also illustrates what has been troubling the convention's progress almost from the start—a blatant disregard for what the average GW student wants and expects from the body.

The fact that the assemblage gave Thiem a clear mandate despite the obvious and recurrent lies and misrepresentations he has given to people both on and off the convention cannot be logically defended. What is it about this non-student Thiem which makes him such an important character in the scenario known as the constitutional convention? And, what's more, who are these students who are making the judgments about Thiem and Reno? Who do they really represent in terms of the student body?

If Mr. Riley is correct in his appraisal of the student body taking a look at the convention's proceedings, perhaps it's time for everyone to take some time and closely examine "their" constitutional convention. The chances are they will not like what they see.

Creamed After Coffee

Saturday night's attack on ISS President Mohammed A. Farooqi cannot be excused as another politically motivated action by a bunch of overzealous students (see story, p. 7). The beating of Farooqi goes beyond politics and enters the realm of disgust and reprehension.

The ISS executive committee's position in regard to Zionism and the Palestinian state has not been very popular with a large portion of the GW community. However, Farooqi or anyone else, has as much right to espouse his views as a United States Senator or a Presidential candidate. The fact that he has taken an unpopular stand or comes from a different country should have nothing to do with his right of free speech in this country. And that right was taken advantage of by a couple of people who obviously believe their views and rights should supercede Farooqi's. That included the right of the fist.

We can only take some satisfaction in the fact that the students involved in the alleged attack were not from GW. Hopefully, the Jewish Activist Front leaders on this campus realize that violence and other irresponsible acts have no place in the political forum or, for that matter, in any forum.

Telling It Like It Is

The Student Activities Office (SAO) would like to express its concern about statements made in the Hatchet editorial of Nov. 13. We have been accused of "taking a back seat in the proceedings...seemingly trying to ignore the Thiem affair despite the requests for help from the Program Board chairman...failing to take proper measures to unmask Thiem..." and taking a "non-committal stance" in Program Board affairs.

Though the functions of the Program Board are officially delegated by the director of student activities, and it could be said that the Student Activities Office is ultimately responsible for their affairs, the Program Board establishes its own procedures and policies and has direct authority over its budget. It is the responsibility of one staff member in this office to act in an advisory capacity to the board.

The philosophy of the office has been to grant student organizations the latitude they desire in controlling their own affairs. Another way to express that philosophy is to expect that students and their organizations take credit for their successes and accept culpability for their failures. That is what life is like "out there," and I think we have an obligation to provide that learning opportunity.

Perhaps it is possible for the SAO to become more involved by taking more control of student organizations. In fact, that might make life easier for SAO staff. However, many student organizations, particularly the Program Board, balk at the thought of any interference from any administrators. When it occasionally becomes necessary for us to intervene, as required by University policy, it is often met by resistance and suspicion.

For example, our recent ultimatum to the Program Board to have a successful concert (as measured by financial solvency and GW attendance) or discontinue its big concert effort is certainly not being non-committal. This "interference" came only after four years of successive failures of concerts, and four years of discussion and debate between the SAO staff and Program Board members to consider a more responsible approach to this form of expensive programming.

Even in the "Thiem controversy," while one Program Board member suggests that we ban him from organizational activities, another invites him to participate fully. It is a difficult matter for administrators to differentiate between providing adequate assistance and interfering—especially when the students involved do not agree on what actions should be taken.

Alan Cohn, the Program Board chairman, felt that we offered "no sound advice," on the bugging matter. In fact, every possible alternative was specifically discussed during the course of two separate meetings. Alan did not find any of those alternatives acceptable, and since he, not I, was the aggrieved party, it was his decision not to pursue the matter.

Please be assured that we want to provide assistance to student organizations, but also recognize that when and how to intervene are difficult decisions to make. At this point we are criticized for taking too little action—a week ago we might have been accused of meddling in students' affairs.

Your editorial, I think, was poorly conceived and misrepresented the efforts and concerns of the Student Activities Office. In particular, two of my staff—Rita Goldman, assistant director of student activities—programming, and Thea Frisby, assistant to the director—have been dealt a great disservice, for they have been spending almost all of their time and energy these past few months in a genuine effort to help the Program Board through its problems and to accomplish its goals.

If you chose to print this, I would suggest that an apt heading would be "damned if we do, and damned if we don't."

David G. Speck is GW's director of student activities.

Finally, A Constitution

A few weeks ago in this space I lamented the lack of input given by GW students to the problems of the formation of a student government. Since the situation has not changed at all since that time, I have decided to take the bull by the horns and make some suggestions about how student government at GW should be set up, and what duties and powers it should ideally have. To wit, I am submitting to the readers of this column the text of what I propose as the constitution of a student governing body. I have used as my model the incredibly old constitution of Lower Volta.

We, the people of the George Washington University (excluding the residents of Thurston Hall, until it can be ascertained that there are people living in that building), in order that we can get the whole matter cleared up before the Dec. 3 deadline for completion of this document, do ordain and establish this constitution of the University Student Governing Body.

ARTICLE ONE:

LEGISLATIVE POWERS

All legislative powers granted herein shall be vested in a legislative committee. This committee shall consist of 50 students from the University, selected at random from the list of students. They shall serve, willingly or not, until academic demands, death, taxes, Macke or a Hatchet expose deem otherwise.

No person shall be a member of the legislative committee if he shall have an I.Q. greater than 23. Should a subsequent test prove his I.Q. to have risen above that figure, he shall be removed from the committee, preferably by force.

When vacancies through the above reasons occur on the committee, the vacancy shall be filled as quickly as possible by throwing all student names into a hat and picking out of said-fedora enough persons, to fill the vacancies.

The general powers of said committee shall be feet scratching, nail biting, and, in the best GW tradition, excessive infighting. The committee shall be powerless to do anything of any importance whatsoever without a note from the parents of the members of the committee; and may only perform personal functions with the express written permission of enough University officials to insure plenty of red tape.

ARTICLE TWO:

EXECUTIVE POWERS

The executive powers shall be vested in the President of the Student Governing Body. He shall be selected every four hours from the ranks of the student body, so as to cut the high rate of attrition generally found amongst campus leaders.

The President shall be selected by committee. Candidates shall submit to this committee, which shall be made up of the largest amount of people which can fit into a phone booth-sized office on the Center fourth floor, a list of their accomplishments in the fields of government, money handling, trustworthiness and responsibility.

The committee shall then deliberate and select the least qualified candidate to be President. A felony arrest or knowledge of the use of hidden recording equipment shall be given the highest priority in consideration, should a candidate possess such attributes, or preferably, have had them repossessed at any time.

The President's powers shall be equal to those of the legislative committee, so as to maintain a principle of checks and balances. Should the checks flowing in and out of the Governing Board ever balance, the entire government shall be impeached for propriety and legal handling of funds.

ARTICLE THREE: THE JUDICIARY

The judiciary branch shall consist of a panel of nine judges picked from the most intelligent members of the law school, and shall be utterly ignored, again to preserve the checks and balances principle.

ARTICLE FOUR: MISCELLANEOUS

Freedom of the Press: There shall be no censorship by the government of the Hatchet, except in the cases of material written by Mark Shiffrin, in which case complete and total (see POTTS, p. 13)

Deadlines for columns and letters are Tues. at 4 p.m. for the Thursday edition and Fri. at 4 p.m. for the Monday edition. All materials should be typed triple spaced on an 82-space line. For further information, please contact the editorial page editor at the HATCHET office, Center Room 433 or call 676-7550.

Reno Seat Uncertain, Thiem Wins On Vote

Milstein later informed the Hatchet he might bring the issue of non-student participation in student organizations before the committee at their next meeting.

Many delegates questioned motives behind the action to remove Thiem, addressing their remarks particularly to the non-delegate speakers who attended the meeting. Delegate Mark Strand said he felt it was an attempt by "politically ambitious people to carry the henchman politics of the Program Board over to the convention," an apparent reference to Thursday's Hatchet articles on Program Board dissension and infighting.

Some delegates also appeared angry over what they felt was Milstein's attempt at intimidation. When asked by delegate Stephen Berke whether Milstein's comments about the Joint Committee could be construed as a threat, Milstein replied that he wasn't attempting to threaten the body, but to present to them some feedback of which he felt they should be aware.

Strand, referring to an earlier Joint Committee vote that set a Dec. 3 deadline for a first draft of a constitution, said, "I question the support of students on the Joint Committee anyhow."

Delegates Brad Shipp and Robert Rodriguez agreed that the Joint Committee, as Shipp put it, "should make its decision on the materials we produce, not on personalities."

Rodriguez, while noting that Thiem might have made a mistake in not informing delegates of his student status, threatened to file a legal suit if "one member [of a ratifying committee] votes against this document because of the composition of this convention's membership."

Perhaps the most persuasive speech was delivered by Leroy Riley. Noting the convention was essentially responding to a Hatchet story about a problem that hadn't been introduced to the body previously "and by the way, they don't call it the Hatchet for nothing"—he went on to complain bitterly about what he felt was excessive criticism the convention receives from the Hatchet, Joint Committee, and other campus groups.

"You say that students are looking at us with a critical eye," Riley said, speaking to Mitchell. "I say you're full of shit. I say they're not even looking at us." He also referred to the non-delegates in attendance indirectly, saying that "Jerry [Tinianow] is a concerned student...but there are those here who are only concerned with aggrandizing their position."

Riley finished with the statement, "The contention is that Thiem is not a student. My contention is—so what?"

Earlier, the convention heard and debated a motion from Tinianow to oust Reno, however the delegates failed to prevent the issue from being sent to the credentials committee for consideration. Committee chairman Andrew Kline promised to report on Reno at the next meeting.

Board Hears Food Gripes

Joint Food Service Board (JFSB) members decided last week to set up grievance tables in the three Macke board cafeterias today, tomorrow and Wednesday to receive any complaints or comments about Macke food and service. Surveys will be available for students to evaluate the food and service.

Several JFSB members said they had already noticed improvements in the cafeterias. With the addition of several new staff members and the shifting of several employees, there "should be more efficiency" throughout the cafeterias, according to James Nunemaker, a JFSB member. Board member Marc Stanley said he had "noticed increased cooperation" from Macke workers and that "Macke should be commended."

Elaine Gilby of the JFSB menu planning committee said many students have been criticizing the committee's entree choices, particularly when it had selected two unpopular entrees for one meal.

Gilby said there had been "communications problems between the menu committee and the managers" which would soon be corrected, although she thought the "menus should be made up more in line with students' tastes."

The board also discussed funding of the Omicron Delta Kappa (ODK) leadership conference. Last year, the JFSB gave $500 to the conference, and ODK president Michael Postar asked for $600 this year, plus $1 per person on the meal plan attending the conference. members instead voted a guaranteed amount of $250, plus a $3 allotment per meal plan student.

Buff Make Center Debut, Crush Athletes In Action

by Steve Miller
Hatchet Staff Writer

The Colonials opened the new Smith Center by defeating Athletes in Action, 108-82, in an exhibition game which, despite the large margin of victory, showed that the GW squad still needs more work before they take on St. Leo in their season opener Dec. 1.

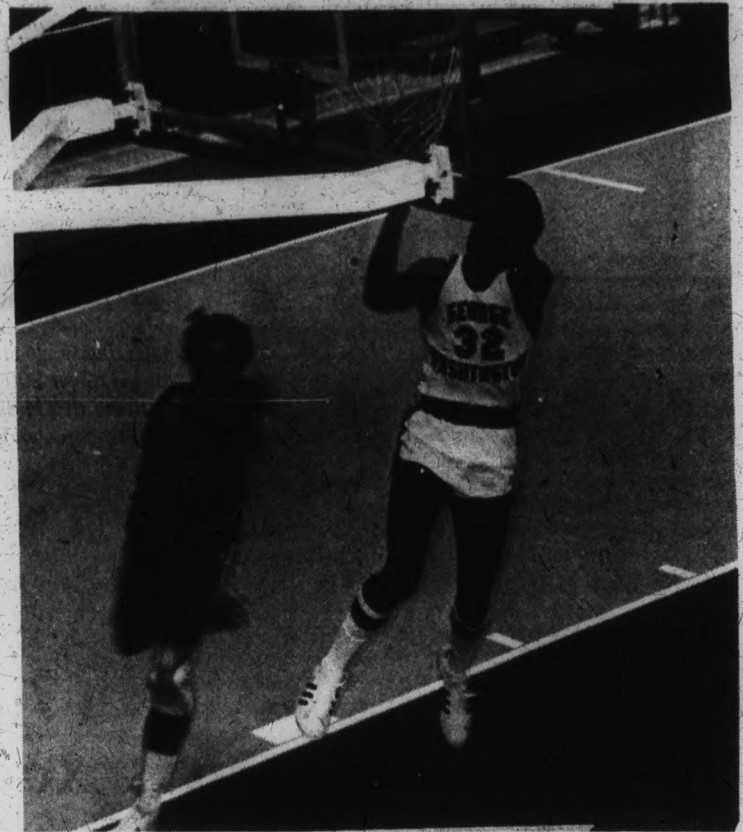

Although coach Bob Tallent was pleased overall with the play of his team, it was obvious that the Colonials are not ready to begin the schedule. The GW team appeared lackadaisical from the outset, and allowed AIA, a team of former college players, to take an eight-point lead at the midway mark in the first half.

It was not until 3 and a half minutes remained in the half that the Colonials began to move the ball well against AIA, outscoring them 14-4 to take a 47-35 halftime lead.

Haviland Harper remained a bright spot throughout the game, leading all scorers with 26 points. Harper was particularly effective in the first half, when he scored 16 of his tallies and pulled a sluggish Colonial team out of the doldrums. The 6'7" center-forward proved to be the approximately 2,000 fans on hand that he has fully recovered from his back injury of a year ago.

Harper worked smoothly at center against AIA, holding their 6'11" center Scott Magnuson to 11 points. GW's regular center, Kevin Hall, played just the first four minutes of the game before he was benched by coach Tallent. Hall had missed three days of practice with a case of shin splints, and the coach "did not want to see him get hurt." Hall will have the weekend off in the hopes that he can get back into playing condition.

Colonials had no trouble with the Athletes in Action team, and GW led by as much as 26 with minutes to go. The big lead gave coach Tallent a chance to look at some of his younger players, who came through with fine performances for the Smith Center crowd.

Freshman Mike Samson put in nine points in five minutes of second-half play, and Tyrone Howze exercised crowd-pleasing ball control and added six points in the final four minutes of the game, including the tally that put GW over the 100-point mark.

Leslie Anderson continued to be a dominating force off the boards as he pulled down 15 rebounds. GW outrebounded AIA 52-37.

Another bright spot in the game was the play of Jim Smith, a transfer from Pensacola (Fla.) JC. Whenever he was on the court, the 6'6" forward played the kind of aggressive ball that the Colonials need to keep from being pushed around by larger teams.

Good Ol' Boys IM Champs

by Donna Olshan
Asst. Sports Editor

Paul McMahon was knocked unconscious and taken to GW Hospital Saturday during the quarterfinals of the football intramural championships while his team, the Good Ol' Boys, defeated the Learned Hands 12-7.

However, McMahon snapped back on Sunday to lead the Good Ol' Boys to victory over the Bullheads 7-0, by scoring the lone touchdown, leading the rushing and intercepting two passes. McMahon, an infielder for the Colonial baseball team, rushed for an estimated 100 yards.

The victory marks the first time in a number of years that the intramural football crown goes back to an undergraduate team. Both the Good Ol' Boys and the Bullheads were not expected to be contenders in the championship race because they were unseeded members of the B league. But it turned out to be competition laden with upsets, especially after the Bullheads, the "Cinderella team" of the IM playoffs, upset the Red Guard, last year's champions, in the semi-finals Saturday.

McMahon scored the game's only tally after receiving a hand-off from quarterback Doug Cushman and running 25 yards on a sweep to score.

The intramural football program is fiercely competitive at GW. There are 37 teams. High participation is partly due to the fact that GW doesn't have an intercollegiate football team.

Many of the teams consist of former high school varsity players. The Good Ol' Boys have former All-Virginia state linebacker Larry Cushman, who played for Lee High School, in addition to Randy Levine, who played for Oceanside High School in New York. The Bullheads have Roy Herman, who played varsity for Poly Prep High School, N.Y.

Herman, co-supervisor with Randy Neugrochel of the intramural football program, said the Bullheads were clearly the underdogs and they had gotten to the finals on "heart and desire." Neugrochel put the Good Ol' Boys as the seven-point favorite at the outset of the game.

Both team finalists will receive jerseys as their awards. The Good Ol' Boys will journey to Maryland next Saturday to represent GW in the Extramural Championship when they meet Federal City College. The extramural competition will decide the area intramural champion.

Intramural basketball rosters are available at the intramural office in the Smith Center, room 103. In addition, all those interested in officiating are asked to attend a meeting, Tuesday, Nov. 18 at 7:30 pm, in the Smith Center classroom.

GW faculty and staff have until Wednesday, Nov. 26 to order their basketball season tickets at the discount price of $27.50. After that, faculty and staff must pay full price for any game they attend.

Smith Center Opens, Receives High Marks

by Donna Olshan
Asst. Sports Editor

That flashy, brassy place called the Charles E. Smith Center was finally opened to the public Friday.

A large number of GW faculty and students turned out for the official opening. "Terrific," "fantastic," were words heard over and over again as students bounded through the two gyms, bounced in and out of the squash and hand ball courts, leaped about the bleachers and wound in and out of locker rooms and saunas.

The cheerleaders put on a show in the main gym, march music played in the background and a man sold balloons.

In the auxiliary gym, which is lined for volleyball, badminton, tennis and basketball, the women's athletic department showed a slide show of its activities and passed out buttons saying "God Bless You Title IX" and "Score with Women's Athletics."

Some of the more devout basketball fans were seen stomping about the gym floor trying to form an opinion about the brand new urethane surface. It generally received an overwhelming seal of approval, except for the few traditionalists who adamantly prefer wood floors.

There were some who were disappointed over the fact that the pool is being replastered and will not be ready for another week. The squash courts are not aligned properly, and they won't be ready for Monday's official opening.

There are some big commercial plans for the Smith Center. These include the Xerox Tennis Classic featuring world class tennis players, scheduled in March during spring break, and the GW vs. Maryland basketball game which will be televised January 7. A television contract is also being negotiated for the 1976-1977 basketball season when the Colonials join a new conference.

Volleyers Third In Tournament

The GW volleyball team closed its season on a positive note by placing third in the Metropolitan Intercollegiate Sports Association for Women (MISAW) area tournament this weekend. GW finished the season with an overall record of 13-15.

"I think we played as well this weekend as we have all year," said Coach Kevin Colgate, who was more than satisfied with the third-place finish. GW finished behind Howard and tournament host Gallaudet, both excellent teams.

In Friday night's competition, the women won their first round match by decisively defeating Hood College, 15-6, 15-7. In the second round, the Buff took on American, who had advanced by upsetting highly regarded Georgetown in the first round. American was no match for GW, however, as the Buff trounced the Eagles, 15-12, 15-9.

GW then faced Howard, a squad that didn't lose a game in the entire double-elimination competition. The Buff played a tight, exciting overtime contest in the first game with Howard, but fell, 10-12. The loss seemed to destroy whatever momentum GW had, and they were trounced in the second game 5-15.

A tired GW squad then came back on Saturday to take third place by defeating American, 12-15, 15-13, 15-11.

GW star Carmen Samuel received first team all-star recognition.

You bet you rass.
